Dear Mr. Lombardo,

Just a note to express my appreciation for what your company is doing to impress on young people the importance of managing their finances. As parents, it is our responsibility to teach our youngsters the importance of monitoring their credit card purchases and living within a budget but often times it takes a bad experience to learn a valuable lesson. Sometimes, the same message from an outside source such as Cambridge Credit Counseling will have a greater impact than from us "uninformed parents".

Young people, especially those involved in college bowling, do a great deal of traveling to compete and, more often than not, have to use their credit card to pay for travel, lodging and food. It is very easy for them to exceed their ability to pay but with your materials to further educate young people on managing their personal finances, it supports the efforts of parents and coaches.

As a tournament manager of the Las Vegas Invitational, thanks for your financial support of college bowling tournaments. It allows us a little more freedom in conducting our events in a professional manner and it is always a good feeling to write a scholarship check to a college bowling program. I have competed in events from your weekly league to the former Firestone Tournament of Champions and nothing matches the excitement of college bowling. It is competition at it's best and thanks to Cambridge for making it better.

Sincerely,

Glenn Carlson
